in March 2015 Elizabeth Uvebirené had a brainwave that a less determined 22-year old might have dismissed as a water-cooler pipe dream. It was ignited by a book by Sheryl Sandberg. "I'd always devoured self-help books growing up - books like Lean In," says Uviebinene. "These were written by white women and were great but they didn't have the added complexities of now to be a black woman and get ahead. It was like we didn't exist in these books. Sandberg had one chapter in her follow-up book [Option B] about a black woman's experience and it sparked something in me. A need for a sisterhood-I wanted to bottle it."

The bottling, she thought, would come in the form of a book - a bible no less - to offer black teenagers and women the kind of advice she would have lived to have received growing up, to help navigate her way to a bigger, freer life. The problem was that she was a marketing manager and not a writer. So the perfect person to write it, she decided was her best friend, Yomi Adegoke, then also 22 and working at Channel 4. "Because Yomi's a journalist, I thought she would write it and I would market, it," says Uviebinene. "But she sold the idea back to me to both write it together" So that's what they did. It did not matter that they were both working long hours in highly competitive careers - they wrote every evening and weekend for the next year, Nor that neither had written a book before - they simply googled "how to write a book" and set up focus groups with friends to discover the breadth of what they needed to research.

Q43. Direction: Read the passage given below and answer the question(s) that follow(s) in March 2015 Elizabeth Uviebinene had a brainwave that a less determined 22-year-old might have dismissed as a water-cooler pipe dream. It was ignited by a book by Sheryl Sandberg, 'I'd always devoured self-help books growing up - books like Lean in, "says Uvebirené "These were written by white women and were great but they didn't have the added complexities of how to be a black woman and get ahead it was like we didn't exist in these books. 'Sandberg had one chapter in her follow-up book (Option B) about a black woman's experience and it sparked something in me. A need for a sisterhood - I wanted to bottle it."

The bottling, she thought, would come in the form of a book - a bible no less - to offer black teenagers and women the kind of advice she would have liked to have received growing up to help navigate her way to a bigger, freer life. The problem was that she was a marketing manager and not a writer So the perfect person to write it, she decided, was her best friend, Yomi Adegoke then also 22 and working at Channel 4 "Because Yomi's a journalist, I thought she would write it and I would market it, "says Uviebinene "But she sold the idea back to me to both write it together" So that's what they did. It did not matter that they were both working long hours in highly competitive careers - they wrote every evening and weekend for the next year. Nor that neither had written a book before - they simply googled "how to write book' and set up focus groups with friends to discover the breadth of what they needed to research.

Q44. Direction: Read the passage given below and answer the question(s) that follow(s) in March 2015 Elizabeth Uviebinene had a brainwave that a less determined 22-year-old might have dismissed as a water-cooler pipe dream. It was ignited by a book by Sheryl Sandberg, 'I'd always devoured self-help books growing up - books like Lean in, "says Uvebirené "These were written by white women and were great but they didn't have the added complexities of how to be a black woman and get ahead it was like we didn't exist in these books. 'Sandberg had one chapter in her follow-up book (Option B) about a black woman's experience and it sparked something in me. A need for a sisterhood - I wanted to bottle it."

The bottling, she thought, would come in the form of a book - a bible no less - to offer black teenagers and women the kind of advice she would have liked to have received growing up to help navigate her way to a bigger, freer life. The problem was that she was a marketing manager and not a writer So the perfect person to write it, she decided, was her best friend, Yomi Adegoke then also 22 and working at Channel 4 "Because Yomi's a journalist, I thought she would write it and I would market it, "says Uviebinene "But she sold the idea back to me to both write it together" So that's what they did. It did not matter that they were both working long hours in highly competitive careers - they wrote every evening and weekend for the next year. Nor that neither had written a book before - they simply googled 'how to write book' and set up focus groups with friends to discover the breadth of what they needed to research.

Question: Which of the following fields does Elizabeth consider herself good at?

There was once in the country of Alifbay, a sad city the saddest of cities a city so famously sad that it had forgotten its name. It stood by a mournful sea full of glumfish, which were so miserable to eat that they made people belch with melancholy even though the skies were blue.

In the North of sad city stood mighty factories in which (so I'm told) sadness was actually manufactured, packaged and sent all over the world, which never seemed to get enough of it. Black smoke poured out of the chimneys of the sadness factories and hung over the city like bad news.

And in the depths of the city, beyond an old zone of ruined buildings that looked like broken hearts, there lived a happy young fellow by the name of Haroun, the only child of the story teller Rashid Khalifa, whose cheerfulness was famous throughout that unhappy metropolis, and whose never-ending stream of tall, short and winding tales had earned him not one but two nick names. To his admirers he was Rashid the Ocean of Nations, as stuffed with cheery stories as the sea of glumfish, but to his jealous rivals he was the Shah of Blah. To his wife, Soraya, Rashid was for many years as loving a husband as anyone could wish for and during these years Haroun grew up in a home in which, instead of misery and frowns, he had his father's ready laughter and his mother's sweet voice raised in song.
